

Correct use of ALT attribute

di Paolo Franzese

A weird behavior of Internet Explorer for Windows regarding image alt attribute makes web designers and developers to think that image's alt attribute was meant to associate a tool-tip text for an image resource.

Instead, alt attribute should be used by the browser as a placeholder when the image is not yet loaded or not available (think about screen readers or text-only browsers).

If you want to display a tool-tip while user hovers her mouse on the image just use the title attribute, as shown in the example below.

Thanks to Lawrence Oluyede

---

Da un articolo scritto da Paolo Franzese il 25 Agosto 2009